WHO WAS EINAR SWAN?
A STUDY IN JAZZ AGE
FAME AND OBLIVION

By
Sven Bjerstedt

Einar Swan. Portrait from the Worcester Telegram, April 24, 1927.

PREFACE

"Our bloom is hasty and we fade for ages," sighs the poet.¹

This melancholy reflection on human life conditions is well exemplified by the case of Einar Swan.

Ask a person in the street to tell you what he knows about Duke Ellington. There will probably be an answer, more or less informative. Enquire about the 1920s 'King of Jazz,' Paul Whiteman, and the quality of the answers will vary significantly (perhaps depending on which street you choose to employ for your query). Now ask about Whiteman's competitor Vincent Lopez. The outcome of your enquiry will be even fewer and less significant answers. We are now rapidly approaching the level of obscurity. Ask for information concerning Lopez's head arranger and lead saxophonist, the multi-instrumentalist and hit composer Einar Swan. The results will be meagre in the extreme. In fact, not even a handful of the world's most knowledgeable jazz historians will have anything at all to tell you.

I have always loved the song "When Your Lover Has Gone" by E. A. Swan and was very surprised to suddenly one day find out that Swan's first name was Einar. It most definitely seemed to have a Scandinavian ring to it. I asked everyone I could think of for information on Einar Swan. Nobody seemed to know anything at all about him. That made me really curious.

This was the beginning of a search that turned out to be quite difficult. Some decades ago this versatile lyricist, composer, arranger and extreme multi-instrumentalist was a very successful man indeed, working at the world's centre of popular music. For several reasons, his life and work fell into nearly complete oblivion. The purpose of this biographical essay is to shed some light on the forgotten Einar Swan.

It could not have been written without the kind and generous assistance of a number of persons and institutions. Fredrik Tersmeden has been constantly supportive during the entire research process. Many thanks for all your suggestions and clarifications, Fredrik! Thanks are also due to Stephen J. INTRODUCTION: WHO WAS EINAR SWAN?

*For ages and ages
The poets and sages
Of love wond'rous love always sing
But ask any lover
And you'll soon discover
The heartaches that romance can bring.*

*When you're alone
Who cares for starlit skies
When you're alone
The magic moonlight dies
At break of dawn
There is no sunrise
WHEN YOUR LOVER HAS GONE.*

*What lonely hours
The evening shadows bring
What lonely hours
With mem'ries lingering
Like faded flow'rs
Life can't mean anything
WHEN YOUR LOVER HAS GONE.*

*What good is the scheming
The planning the dreaming
That comes with each new love affair
The love that you cherish
So often may perish
And leave you with castles in air.*

When you're alone...

Hundreds and hundreds of artists have performed and recorded the popular standard 1931 jazz tune "When Your Lover Has Gone": Louis Armstrong, Billie Holiday, Sarah Vaughan, Frank Sinatra... You name them.²

Who wrote this song? It is a wonderful sad evergreen filled with mature melancholic yet dignified sentiment – qualities not quite commonplace in its genre. The composer and lyricist behind this gem was Einar Swan (1903-40), a Finnish-American multi-instrumentalist from Massachusetts.

Who?

² For some reason, many vocal performers have preferred to skip the lyrics of the first verse. In case the verse is included in recordings, often the lyrics of the second verse are used.

THE FINNISH EMIGRATION

He was the son of Finnish emigrants.

In the 19th century nearly all Finns worked in farming. Thanks to long summer days, the harvests in this northerly country would usually suffice – but not always. About eight percent of the population starved to death due to the bad harvests 1867-68.

Finland's national poet Johan Ludvig Runeberg (1804-77) idealized the heroic inhabitants of the meagre Finnish soil, notably in his poem (1830) about the peasant Paavo of Saarijärvi, the personification of 'sisu', endurance. Though he repeatedly loses his harvest to the frost, Paavo nibbles his 'pettu' (pine bark bread) without complaints.

The Finnish population increased rapidly. The 'American fever' grew to become a mass movement during the last decades of the 19th century. The main reasons were economic and social. In the U.S. vacant jobs were abundant and the wages were five times higher.

The Finnish emigrants settled mostly in Massachusetts, Michigan, and Minnesota. By 1900 there were more Finnish newspapers in America than in Finland.

There were also political and military reasons to emigrate. The Russianization of the Finnish army was an ongoing process: Finlanders were bound to defend the whole empire, not only Finland. In 1898 the Czar appointed the notoriously hard-fisted Bobrikoff governor-general of Finland. A period of turbulence and terror was about to come. Bobrikoff laid a bill before the Diet: the army was to be four times larger and incorporated in the Russian army. The Finnish constitution was abrogated in a coup d'état by the Czar, who refused to receive a deputation of 500 representatives bringing a petition signed by more than half a million people. To meet the tough passive resistance, Bobrikoff took measures: newspapers were confiscated, Russian troops were sent for, officials were dismissed and replaced by Russians.

One of the many men who chose to leave Finland in 1899 was the 22-year old carpenter Matti Aleksinpoika Joutsen from Evijärvi, soon to become Mr. John Matthew Swan.

MATTI JOUTSEN BECOMES JOHN SWAN

Matti Aleksinpoika was born in Evijärvi on October 7, 1877. He was the third son of Aleksi Matinpoika Joutsen and Fredrika Antintytär Nääs. It was common Finnish practice to adopt your surname from the farm where you lived. Matti's family lived at the farm Joutsen (meaning 'swan' in Finnish). The family had seven sons – one of whom died when he was an infant – and one daughter. In 1890 they moved from Joutsen in Evijärvi to become lodgers at Broända in Alaveteli (Nedervetil) parish. Alekski Joutsen was known in Evijärvi as 'Lintu-Alix' ('lintu' meaning 'bird'). He died in 1915 and his widow Fredrika in 1922.

The reason for this nickname is unknown. Maybe Alekski was a bird hunter? Maybe he was good at imitating birds, whistling or even playing the flute? The answer to this question has not survived among the people of Alaveteli. But other recollections of Alekski and Riika have been preserved: to this day they are remembered for being mean. They treated their children very badly, according to what the old villagers today have heard. Four of the family's children died young. The four others emigrated.

In the Swedish-speaking environment of Nedervetil, Alekski Matinpoika Joutsen was given a new nickname: 'Halt-Alex' (Swedish, meaning 'Alex-with-a-limp'). The reason was dramatic. Alekski had been severely punished by John's younger brother Oskari, according to this quote:

"Alekski, the father, was also called 'Alex-with-a-limp'. It is said that one day when Oskari was chopping wood, Alekski came into the shed and started harassing and teasing him. He used to put his foot on the chopping block and then draw it away before the axe fell. Then Oskari told him: 'If you put your foot on the block once more, I'll chop it off!' Alekski put his foot on the block, Oskari struck at once, the axe went through his boot and cut off half of his foot. Alekski went with a limp the rest of his life."³

Around 1894-95, Matti changed his surname to Svan (or Swan), the Swedish (and English) translation of Joutsen. In 1897 he left his family and moved to Helsinki (Helsingfors). His two elder brothers Herman Joutsen and Antti Swan had already emigrated to America and lived in New York with their wives. Matti was soon to follow.

On board the S/S St. Louis, departing May 13, 1899 from Southampton, was Matti Svan, 22 years old.⁴

In an interview in the Worcester Telegram 1915, he described his adolescent years and his reasons for emigrating.⁵

"Ever since I was a young boy I wanted to be a great musician and music was my one solace in my little home across the seas where, one of a family of 10 children, it was hard work for us all to eke out a living under the rule of the Russian czar.

“It was utterly impossible for me to gain an education, either in grammar school, or in music for you see, money wasn’t lying around [on] the ground, and it took the combined efforts of the entire family to keep us alive.

“Necessity compelled me to begin work at the tender age of 10 years [...]. Out in the bleak country where I was reared, farming was about the only thing to follow. There wasn’t much else to do, so I bade my parents, brothers and sisters goodbye and, with a stout heart and strong body, left home to make my own way in this world.

“I secured work where I was able to learn the rudiments of a joiner’s trade and I worked until I learned my trade, 12 hours every day for five years. During this time I had no opportunity to study music because all my time was taken up in learning mechanical drafting and other technical courses which are necessary to become a full-fledged artisan in Finland.

“After that I started in at building, where I worked 10 hours each day, which, of course, gave me more time for attending evening school until I was able to work my way and complete a technical school in Helsingfors, Finland, with money I had saved. But this attending evening school and studying for a good technical education, which kept me up late every night, and the working 10 hours each day, did not give me any time to study music. Whenever I got a chance to play any instrument I played as long as I was able.

“It was about that time that I decided to start for the United States, where I was told I would only have to work eight hours each day, thereby giving me a few hours each day to study music, beside more money for my school expenses. [...]

“In the United States I have found more time to continue my study in the night schools and to study music. All that I am sorry for is that my physical condition is not as good as it once was. This is due to my hard studying in Finland and since I came to the United States.”

It may be suspected that the eloquent immigrant’s story has been elaborated a bit by the reporter. The Joutsen siblings were eight, not ten. According to Alaveteli (Nedervetil) church records, Matti stayed with his family until the age of twenty. The article also states that John Swan emigrated in order to avoid being drafted into the Russo-Japanese war in 1904. This must be due to a misunderstanding by the reporter.

EDLA

Edla Maria Aaltonen was born in Koski on April 1, 1877. Her parents were Enoch Wilhelm Gabrielsson Paltta and his wife Ulla (Ulrica) Miina (Wilhelmina) Ericsson.⁶

In the 1890s she worked as a saleswoman in a hat shop in Helsinki (Helsingfors).⁷

She emigrated at the age of 23, leaving Vaasa (Vasa) in Finland, departing from Helsinki with the Polaris on August 8, 1900, arrival with the S/S City of Rome on September 4, 1900. She travelled together with a Maria Styf from Pirttikylä (Pörtom) south of Vaasa, bound for Hancock, Michigan.⁸

John and Edla married probably in 1900. Eventually they settled in Massachusetts. They were to have nine children. One boy died an infant. The eldest was Ellen Victoria, born on December 1, 1901. The second one was Einar William, born on March 20, 1903. This was the beginning of our story. It was also the beginning of an extraordinary family orchestra.

THE SWAN FAMILY ORCHESTRA

The Finnish people have always been known to cherish their ancient traditions of music, singing and mythical epic tales. This feature was by no means diminished in the Finnish settlements in America. When the Finnish Music Society of the East was founded in Maynard, Massachusetts, on January 15, 1915, John Matthew Swan was one of its founding participants.⁹ He had already established himself as an important musical leader in the Worcester region. His daughter Aina wrote many years later: “He gave music lessons in Finnish-American communities and organized and led orchestras & bands which involved making musical arrangements.”¹⁰

The names of his orchestras reflected the old Finnish myths: Kaleva, Pohjola, and Kantele (the ancient Finnish zither-like national instrument).

⁶ Enoch Wilhelm Paltta was born on February 5, 1840 in Pertteli and died on December 15, 1915 in Koski Tl. He lived in the house of Mäki in the Hongisto village in Koski Tl. His spouse Miina was born on June 17, 1851 in Kiiikala and died on January 26, 1935 in Koski Tl. I am very grateful to Helena Sundberg for locating Edla's birth record. In Edla's 1935 Worcester death record, the parents' names were incorrectly given as William Aalto and Wilhelmina Lelito.

⁷ Helsingin Sanomat article on Aina Swan Cutler, September 6, 2000. According to Finnish records, Edla moved to Helsinki 1896. However, there was no record of her emigrating in 1900. Curiously, she was still listed as living in Helsinki many years after her death.

¹⁰ Hand-written notes on Swan family history by Aina Swan Cutler. A facsimile of these notes is included in Appendix A.

Kaleva was the name of the Finnish national band in Gardner, conducted by John Matthew Swan in the early 1910s. A Worcester orchestra led by him a few years later was called Pohjola ('the North'). It featured his two eldest children Ellen on clarinet and Einar on cornet.¹¹

The Swan family lived in Cleveland for a few years before moving to Gardner in 1913. John Swan was a member of the Cleveland Saxophone Quartet and also played cornet and saxophone with William Kirk's band.¹²

John Swan is said to have played during some period "all over the country from coast to coast" with John Philip Sousa's orchestra. It is a small mystery. There is a list on the internet giving the names of J. P. Sousa's band members through the years, but John Swan is not in the list. In a family photograph taken about 1906, John Swan is wearing a band uniform. However, it is not a Sousa band uniform. The distinguished Sousa researcher, Dr. Paul E. Bierley, has no record of John Swan being a Sousa band member.¹³

John Swan also appeared as a composer. His "Kaleva March No. 1" was printed in a Finnish American publication along with solemn notes by the composer, reporting how inspiration had struck him at a 1913 musical festival in Ashtabula, Ohio: "When the festive spirit was at its height I began to hear music from above, and when I raised my eyes to the sky, I saw an image which will never evaporate from my mind. From this image I have received the motifs of the Kaleva March, and if it be granted me, I hope I will be able to catch and form into music many more moments before the end of my days."¹⁴

¹¹ These orchestras are described briefly in Liisa A. Lienes (Ed.), The Finnish Imprint: A New England Experience, Fitchburg, MA: New England Finnish American Bicentennial Committee, 1982, pp. 560-2.

¹³ This piece of information is given by "High Up Among World's Jazz Artists," Worcester Telegram, April 24, 1927, and by Who's Who Among Finnish Americans, Fitchburg, Massachusetts, 1949, p. 152. The list of J. P. Sousa's musicians, not including John Swan, is on the website <http://www.dws.org/sousa/band.htm>

Dr. Paul E. Bierley in a letter to the author, December 7, 2005, certifies that John Swan is not among the over 1,200 names of Sousa band participants that will be listed in his forthcoming book, The Incredible Band Of John Philip Sousa. Dr. Bierley also informs me that the uniform John Swan is wearing in the ca. 1906 family photograph does not match the Sousa band uniform of that period.

¹⁴ The Finnish text reads: "yleisen juhlatunnelman korkeimmillaan ollessa aloin kuulemaan säveläitä ylempää, kohotin katseeni ylös ja näin sellaisen kuvan, joka ei koskaan haihdu pois sielustani. Siitä olen saanut aiheet Kaleva-marssiin ja jos minulle on suotu, toivon monta muuta kohtaa aineellistuttaa ennen aikani loppua." I am grateful to Martha Cutler for kindly providing a copy of this clipping and to Jan-Erik Nygren and Helena Sundberg for translating it. No date or source is specified but the typography is similar to the I. S. R. K.-Union Summer Publication 1916 (quoted elsewhere in this chapter) showing one of young Einar's compositions.

Not only did John Swan study and perform music himself. He also taught his children. Out of eight children, seven became musicians. The Swan family orchestra was in fact a couple of different orchestras, for most of the family members were multi-instrumentalists. There was also a Swan vocal quartet. One constellation featured violin, flute, clarinet, saxophone, and piano or organ. Another one consisted of reed instruments exclusively. They gave concerts and played for lodges, clubs, dances and other entertainments.

The Swan family orchestra of Gardner was featured in the Worcester Telegram in 1915.¹⁵

“This little family orchestra has a wide reputation for musical ability in the northern part of Worcester county, as well as in Worcester, where it has appeared before large audiences.

“According to John M. Swan, who, while the children were little tots, decided to give them a musical education, there seems no end of their musical ability.

“There is hardly an instrument that any of them comes in contact with but what they are able to give a creditable performance. Although they are more experts on some kinds than others, the father, with his little family gathered around him in his home at 307 Coleman street, stated that they were just chuck full of music and he is looking toward the day when his children’s names will be known throughout the United States as great musicians.”

It is difficult to imagine the sacrifices that must have been necessary in order to provide all the instruments and education this family orchestra needed. According to a later article on Einar Swan, his violin studies involved travelling expenses also.

“Determined that his boy should have a thorough musical training his father sent him to Cleveland to study the violin under a noted master there, and every vacation, little Einar [!] was packed off from Worcester to the Ohio city to learn his music. It was this carefully grounding in the fundamentals to which he attributes the success that he has since attained.”¹⁶

A 1912 article in a Cleveland newspaper speaks of the child prodigy: “he is said to play the violin with an ability out of all proportion to his years [...] he began to play on the violin when he was only four years old. [...] His father [...] gave William [!] the only lessons he has had. Altogether he has had only a year and a half of instruction. Yet Sunday night he is going to play the long and difficult 'William Tell' overture with his sister at the piano as accompanist."¹⁷

The 1915 article quotes John Swan:

"Taken together, I have found the task a hard one of educating myself and my children, but I have some reward in seeing my children at an early age taking after me and becoming good musicians. I want to see my children get the best musical education and all other kinds of education, which I can give them.

"To this end we go around giving concerts, the proceeds of which are used in giving the children a higher musical education."

When interviewed, John Swan drew attention mainly to the advantages of his son Einar:

"Einar W. Swan, my oldest boy and the musical genius of the family, was born at Fitchburg 12 years ago, and showed musical talent when he was 2½ years old. He first played the organ and later on I found that he loved to play violin. It was at the age of 4 when he started to play his little violin.

"When I found that he was able to play good I started a trio with Einar as violinist, myself as clarinet player and his sister Ellen, organist. When he was 6 years old we gave our first public concert in which Einar came up to my expectations by making a great hit with his violin playing. After this he rapidly picked up a knowledge of various instruments. He studied in order, piano, clarinet, flute, saxophone, trap drumming, all of which he plays better than many persons who confine their ability to one instrument.

"Einar composed his first violin music in 1914, which he has had copyrighted. Beside attending grammar school and studying more advanced lessons in music of all kinds, he is a violin teacher. He is saving his money for a regular sized violin, which he needs most of all.

"He has a good instrument now, but it is small sized and he needs a larger one. Proceeds from our last concert in Worcester three weeks ago, will be used to buy him one of the best violins I can find. He has, like the rest of my children, fulfilled my expectations of becoming a great musician, and I can sit and dream of the day when he will become as great in name and ability as our present day nationally prominent musicians."¹⁸

¹⁸ Worcester Telegram, 1915, article dated Gardner, February 26.

The clipping preserved by the Swan family has a handwritten note, probably made many years later by Einar's younger sister: "Einar didn't take this route and became a composer instead."

Einar's violin was mentioned. In fact, the expert carpenter John Swan manufactured a number of musical instruments, among them a bassoon and Einar's first (3/4 size) violin.¹⁹

The other siblings are also presented in some detail in the newspaper article: Ellen (1901-75) plays piano, organ, and reed instruments; little Anne (1909-97) plays flute and clarinet; Walter (1904-64) plays reeds.

Music permeated this family. John's wife Edla sang a lot. However, she isn't mentioned with a single word in this 1915 newspaper article on the Swan family orchestra. In a much later interview (2004), younger sister Aina Swan Cutler (1914-2005) reflected on growing up with a singing mother:

"Throughout her life, Aina enjoyed what she thought were Finnish folk songs. Her mother would sing them as she went about her housework and farm chores. The sound of her mother's melodic voice permeates many of Aina's memories. 'I learned fairly recently, after all these years, that she made up all of those songs. She used to just ask the younger children what they wanted a song about,' Aina revealed. Thinking about her mother's songs, Aina let her gaze wonder, 'It's a shame we had no tape recorder back then. If we'd had a tape recorder we could have had them to listen to. We could have translated them and had them printed even.'"²⁰

Cynthia Meigs, daughter of Anne Swan, confirms this: "Mom used to talk about her mother's singing as did my Aunt Aina and also the fact that she made their clothes and generally worked very hard. I can imagine...with 8 children."²¹

In the "Street Lists of Assessed Polls for April 1, 1913," published by the town of Gardner, John Swan is not listed. In the "Street Lists of Assessed Polls for April 1, 1914", he is listed at 167 Pleasant Street, Gardner, and his address as of April 1, 1913 is given as Cleveland, Ohio. It seems the Swan family moved from Gardner to Worcester ca. 1917/18: Swan children were born 1914, 1915, and 1917 in Gardner, 1918 and 1921 in Worcester. The Gardner directory lists John Swan, carpenter, at 167 Pleasant Street (1913-14), at 302 Coleman Street

(1914-15), and at 622 Parker Street (1915-16 through 1917-18 editions). In the 1918-19 edition is an entry that he has moved to Worcester.²²

The following details about John Swan's property holdings at 307 Coleman Street are given in 1915: 1 house, $ 500; 1 house unfinished, $ 600; 1 shed, $ 75, and a 5 acres land $ 300 for a total valuation of $ 1,475. For this the tax assessment was $ 29.35. This property was co-owned by John's brother Antti Swan, who served as the newspaper Raivaaja's business manager in 1910.²³

Ellen and Anne continued playing together in the '20s and early '30s. Cynthia Meigs writes of her mother Anne: "She and her sister Ellen were part of a 5 girl band at one time called the Gypsy Sweethearts. I have some great pictures of them surrounded by all the instruments. I think because she grew up playing she didn't always realize how special her talents were. After she was married she taught at the San Francisco Conservatory and played with the Marin Symphony."

Cynthia Meigs also quotes the following notes written around 1993 by her mother, Anne Swan Meigs: "Walter was playing with various bands (in Europe for a couple of years). Played with Einar for a while with the Swannie Serenaders. He also played in Springfield for a while, I think, until he eventually moved to New York and we lost contact."

Before the Russian regime, Finland was part of the kingdom of Sweden for many centuries and to this day is a bilingual country. The native language of the Swan family was Finnish but the children were encouraged to speak English. Cynthia Meigs writes: "the native language was Finnish but I believe the children were really encouraged to speak English so my mother had lost a lot of her ability to converse in Finnish. She taught me some words here and there. I don't believe she ever mentioned speaking Swedish."²⁴

Younger sister Aina Swan Cutler for many years collaborated as a lyricist with Finnish composer Heikki Sarmanto, providing original lyrics as well as translations of Finnish works. Starting in the 1970s, she spent time every spring in her parents' native country. In 1994 she was awarded the Order of the White Rose by the government of Finland in recognition of her work on behalf of Finnish music.

Photocopies of this newspaper article, probably from the Worcester Telegram 1915, were generously contributed by Einar Swan's son Donald Swan and by Cynthia Meigs who inherited this document from her mother, Anne Swan Meigs. The title of the article reads: "J. M. SWAN, GARDNER, REALIZING LIFE'S AMBITION TO SEE HIS CHILDREN GOOD MUSICIANS, FORMS A FAMILY ORCHESTRA." The text beneath the picture reads: "Swan's family orchestra of Gardner - Reading from left to right: Einar W. Swan, aged 12; Anna Helen Swan, aged 7; John M. Swan, director; Walter E. This "Grand ypo [?] march to the Hope League" (copyright 1914), the first known composition by Einar Swan, was printed in the I. S. R.-Union Summer Publication 1916. The Hope League (Toivon Liitto) was a Sunday school sponsored by the Rauhan Aarre (Treasure of Peace) Temperance Society. Above the short article is a reprint of the 1915 photo of the Swanin perheorkesteri (Swan family orchestra), and the text reads in translation: "John M. Swan and his children, Ellen, Einar, Walter and Anna form a little family orchestra which is well known in the state of Massachusetts where they have given concerts in different cities. They are in high favour with the audience. Already when the children were very young, Mr. Swan decided to give them an opportunity to study and develop their music as much as possible. His decision has partly been carried out already since there are virtually no instruments that the children do not master satisfactorily, though the violin, the piano, and the clarinet are among the most familiar. Being a musical spirit himself, Mr. Swan desires at heart that his children's names will be well known in American music, and he works tirelessly for the best of the children. Let us hope that these small children while they grow up will give their parents pleasure by developing musically, thereby honouring the Finnish nationality." By courtesy of Cynthia Meigs.

On the back of the picture my mother wrote: Sugar Hill, New Hampshire 1929-1932. Hotel Lookoff Ensemble. Anne, Marion, Ellen, Elena, Florence. THE HIGH SCHOOL OF COMMERCE ORCHESTRA, 1921

Already as a child Einar Swan was a multi-instrumentalist, and he developed this even further as a teenager. According to one article, his father “was accomplished in that direction, playing 15 instruments – all the reeds. Einar [!] Swan grew up to play even more. As one of the best musicians Commercial High school ever turned out, he learned to play all the instruments in the school band – explaining it to the authorities by saying that he would be a good lad to have around in case anyone was sick. As a matter of fact, he learned them all out of sheer joy in making music, and making it to suit himself.”

He also displayed a predilection for non-classical music that was going to have radical impact on his future life and career: “For he introduced novel rhythms, and unknown notes into the compositions he played. He was making jazz, though he didn’t know it.”²⁶

There is a picture and some information on this high school orchestra in the 1921 yearbook.²⁷ The list of musicians does not entirely correspond with the photograph.

THE HIGH SCHOOL OF COMMERCE ORCHESTRA

The High School of Commerce Orchestra or Orchestra A, under the excellent direction of Miss Alma Morrisette, added one more prosperous year to the historical list. Five years ago, Miss Morrisette established the orchestra, which has risen now to the highest point of excellence. Five seniors, who have developed wonderfully under her leadership, graduate with our class. They are Flora Jaques, James Landers, Harold and David Richmond, and Earl Fairbanks. The first two are the outstanding players of the orchestra. Miss Jaques, since entering this school, has made a fine impression with her playing of the violin, while "Jimmy" Landers showed the same skill with his drums. The Richmond twins also received praise for their excellent playing at the Class Day exercises. A well satisfied audience heard the greatest concert ever given by a Worcester public school orchestra, on April 28, 1921 – the Commerce Orchestra played.

CHILD PRODIGY GROWING UP

Einar learned music “as soon as he was big enough to blow a bean shooter, and by the time Swan, Jr., was old enough to go to Commercial High school, he was already a performer on nearly every instrument you could name.”²⁸

Another few years later, at the age of 24, Einar Swan was featured in a panegyric article in his hometown newspaper, titled “High Up Among World’s Jazz Artists” and starting with the exclamation “A ‘JAZZ baby’ is Einar [!] Swan, once of Worcester, now of the world, and one of the biggest and blondest musicians in the business.”²⁹

A lot had happened. Einar had grown up. The child prodigy was becoming his own man.

²⁹ “High Up Among World’s Jazz Artists,” Worcester Telegram, April 24, 1927.

He had discovered his own music, and he had, not less important, discovered his love. The music was jazz. The girl was Jewish. The clash with his father was disastrous.

John Swan had worked hard for many years, hoping that Einar and the other children would be successful musicians. However, music outside the legitimate classical genres was incommensurable with his vision.

For some reason, the religion of Einar's sweetheart "Billie", Ann Kaufmann of Southbridge, Massachusetts, only made the father-son conflict worse. The argument on music was serious enough and is said to have come to blows. But when Einar married Ann, he performed the ultimate act to manifest his independence of his father and indeed his Finnish heritage: he converted to the Jewish faith and switched his middle name William to Aaron.

That was it. With one blow, the harmony of the Swan family orchestra had vanished completely. The discord that replaced it lasted for decades. Einar totally lost contact with his family for the rest of his life.

Einar Swan's niece Cynthia Meigs tells a story she heard from her mother, Einar's sister Anne: "He went to New York to pursue his career. He had a terrible fight with his father because his father wanted him to be a classical musician but Einar had other plans. Apparently his father smashed Einar's violin during the argument."³⁰

Einar's son Donald Swan comments on this: "I am not familiar with the smashing of Einar's violin story, but it was common knowledge that John didn't communicate with Einar after he converted. However, after Einar's death members of the Swan family visited my mother in NYC: Aina, Anne Helena, Walter and Arthur with spouse Alma in 1942. We never met Ellen Victoria Haines."³¹

APR 24 1927

A "Jazz baby" is Eino Swan, one of Worcester, now of the world, and one of the biggest and blindest musicians in the business. His father, John E. Swan of Worcester, who once played with the famous band of John Philip Sousa, and who concertized and bandled all over the country from coast to coast, began teaching music to little Eino as soon as he was big enough to blow a bone shouter, and by the time Swan, Jr., was old enough to go to Commercial High school, he was already a performer on nearly every instrument you could name.

John E. Swan himself was accomplished in that direction, playing 12 instruments—all the reeds. Eino Swan grew up to play even more. As one of the best musicians Commercial High school ever turned out, he wanted to play all the instruments in the school band—explaining it to the authorities by saying that he would be a good lad to have around in case anyone was sick. As a matter of fact, he learned them all and at about the same time, and making it to suit himself.

For he introduced novel rhythms, and unknown notes into the compositions he played. He was making his, though he didn't know it.

For meanwhile, his musical education was progressing. Determined that his boy should have a thorough musical training his father sent him to Cleveland to study the violin under a noted master there, and every vacation, little Eino was packed off from Worcester to the Ohio city to learn his lesson. It was this carefully proceeding in the fundamentals to which he attributes the success that he has since attained.

Back in Worcester and out of high school, he formed his own little band, which may be remembered as the "Swannie's Serenaders" who played around here some time ago. The "Swannie Serenaders" were all right but Eino Swan stuck out from the rest of them like a bar of soap in a tub of water, and it wasn't long before he received an offer from the famous Boulevard Gardens in New York city, an offer which he accepted.

at the foot, the management of the famous Elroy hotel came to the Worcester Inn, barely topped it, and offered him a contract in staggering figures, to conduct his orchestra, one of the greatest in all Europe. He turned down the offer.

"My father was back to the United States and not very well," he says, "and I wanted to get back to her. Besides, I'm an American."

So he came back with Lopez, and got an offer from Paul Whitehead, who with Lopez runs the empire of jazz as a twin king. He turned that down also.

He is one of the most talented men in the Lopez orchestra, playing the saxophone, the violin, the piano and the flute as a matter with perfect facility, and playing also 12 other musical instruments "but not very well," he adds modestly.

He is one of the few men in the world who have developed that sort of musical aptitude—the trick of arranging chances for jazz acts, and he does all the arranging for the Lopez orchestra.

When he gets a few minutes off from that, he spends it writing popular songs, and has already, at the age of 22 a list of hits to his credit that makes some envy among the experienced writers of Tin Pan Alley. It includes "Hall of Dreams," "Daisy Street," "White Ghost Shivers," and "Orion."

"Jazz," he says, "is the coming and perfectly legitimate development of modern music. All musicians are turning to it, some more, some less. The modern way of introducing the classics is extremely popular and is bringing the best things in music to people who never heard of them before. Jazz is now firmly established, the music of the future, and already has become classic in a certain way; the only difference being that it is more alive than the older type of music."

Well Eino Swan is thoroughly alive anyway.

When he isn't arranging serenades with his music, he spends his time with his wife, who was Anna Kaufmann of Stockholm, and with his little daughter. "Sure, she'll be a pianist," he says, proudly.

SWANIE'S SERENADERS 1922-24

Einar's choice of musical style was no whim. A few years later, he elaborated on the subject in an interview.

“‘Jazz,’ he says, ‘is the coming and perfectly legitimate development of modern music. All musicians are turning to it, some more, some less. The modern way of syncopating the classics is extremely popular and is bringing the best things in music to people who never heard of them before. Jazz is now firmly established, the music of the future, and already has become classic in a certain way; the only difference being that it is more alive than the older type of music.’”³²

In a 1957 interview, Worcester shoe salesman Joseph Fagan speaks of “a trio that he thinks was the first orchestra with which Swanie ever played.

“Their initial job was at Lake Wopawog, a resort outside East Hampton, Conn. That was during the summer of 1918 when Einar was 16. He played saxophone, Fagan played violins and Henry Berman, now of Connecticut was the pianist. ‘We were pretty young then,’ Fagan told me the other night in his home, ‘and we all thought we were pretty big deals – our own orchestra and playing at a summer resort. After all, we were getting $10 a week. I’m pretty certain this was the first job Swanie ever had as a musician. He went down to Wopawog with us a violinist but he played sax so well, he was made the sax player. I remember he brought with him a violin that his father had made.’

“Swanie played at Wopawog two summers and then he started to move up. He joined Benny Conn’s band, at that time popular at dances in Worcester. After that, he led his own band, the well-remembered Swanie’s Serenaders. Many a matron still sighs at thoughts of dances where he supplied the music.”³³

Out of high school, Einar Swan formed his own band to play his own kind of music: Swanie’s Serenaders. Finnish-American trumpeter Sylvester Ahola remembered this band as “a good, modern group, similar to Frank Ward’s” (a New England territory band that Ahola himself played with).³⁴ Pieces of this orchestra’s history are brought to memory in an article in the Worcester Sunday Telegram, March 22, 1959.

by James Lee

“Oscar Werme of 112 Heard St. has brought to the Main Stem a locally-historic picture, the first edition of Swanie's Serenaders, which is reproduced herewith. The leader was the late Einar Swan, the Worcester boy who (as any Main Stem reader knows) composed the deathless song, ‘When Your Lover Has Gone.’

“This orchestra played together in 1922, first in Worcester, then in Webster. Three of its members, Werme, Swam [!] and Benny Conn, previously had played together in the Fidelity Orchestra of Worcester. The instrumentation of the Serenaders was typical of the day: Piano, drums, sax (and clarinet), violin, banjo, trumpet and trombone. They were played, respectively, by Sammy Swenson, Ernest Paul, Swanie, Julius Levinsky, the late Joe Toscano, Conn and Werme.

“Swenson didn't show up for the photograph and another young man was obtained as his standin. Werme doesn't recall his name. Out of the seven musicians, only Swanie and Toscano are dead.

“A couple of years later, Werme switched to tuba and joined Paul Whiteman's Leviathan Orchestra for four years. Swanie went on to New York, where his genius with practically any musical instrument won him solo spots with several famous orchestras. During this time, he wrote 'When Your Lover Has Gone,' the greatest of all torch songs."

According to the Worcester Telegram 1927, this orchestra had to come to an end:

"The 'Swannie [!] Serenaders' were all right but Einar Swan stuck out from the rest of them like a bar of soap in a coal scuttle, and it wasn't long before he received an offer from the famous Roseland Gardens in New York city, an offer which he accepted."

How could he have refused? This offer meant an opportunity to meet and play with top musicians of popular music and a chance to avoid family conflicts to boot. Unknowingly, by moving to New York Einar also escaped from experiencing the Swan family's final disintegration.

THE SWAN FAMILY DISASTER

About 1932, John M. Swan deserted his wife and children and moved to California, leaving them in poverty. When the breadwinner let them down, they had to beg in order to survive.³⁵

It is difficult to ascertain what really happened. Anne Swan Meigs's daughter Cynthia Meigs writes: "I don't know why John Swan left his family. No one talked about it much. [...] I don't believe my mother was in contact with him after he left. She did mention to me that her mother attempted suicide and was taken to some institution for a while. She had never spoken of this until she was in her eighties. I get the feeling that a lot went on that was not talked about. It would probably make a great story. She said that when the family broke up she was encouraged to leave to live her own life instead of staying with her younger siblings."³⁶

The exact date of these events is not known. John M. Swan is still listed with his family in Worcester in the 1930 census, and in Worcester city directories through 1932. However, a Finnish joiner John Swan, who immigrated in 1899, is listed in the 1930 census of Berkeley, California. This is where John M. Swan's elder brother Herman Joutsen was living at the time. It is difficult to know what to make of it.³⁷

Edla died only a few years later, on April 23, 1935. Her death record states that she was married but separated. The cause of death was cardiovascular renal disease (for several years) and bronchopneumonia (the preceding week).³⁸

John Swan did not attend Edla's funeral and seems to have had no further contact at all with his family. John later owned the Eureka Organ Factory in Eureka, California, building modern electric pipe organs for churches. He is said to have held numerous patents for organs. While living in Fort Bragg, California, he built and installed the organ in the Fort Bragg Trinity Lutheran Church in 1942. This organ is still in use occasionally.³⁹

³⁹ Who's Who Among Finnish Americans, Fitchburg, Massachusetts, 1949, p. 152. John Swan's obituary in the Fort Bragg Advocate, October 4, 1956. According to organist Terry Knaus, "The organ has four hundred wooden pipes. The air is supplied by what I have been told is a blacksmith's bellows. It is somewhat of a challenge to play and has occasionally had problem like continuing to play a note after the key is no longer depressed. As a consequence, about fifteen years ago an electronic organ was purchased and the old organ went into retirement. At one point there was even a vote to remove it but it was never acted on. This last year there has been a new interest and appreciation of the organ and it has been worked on by Spencer Brewer of Willits, CA and has been played occasionally (about one worship service a month). In a history of the church written for our centennial celebration in 1989 by Jeannette Hansen the following reference is found. 'In 1942 the pipe organ was built and installed by John Swan, a wood-instrument instructor who had gained his know-how from having worked in an organ manufacturing plant.'" Terry Knaus: personal communication with the author, December 2005.

The obituaries list his places of residence: San Francisco, Eureka, Healdsburg, Fort Bragg, and Petaluma. According to the death certificate, he died from coronary acclusion (heart blockage) in Petaluma, Sonoma County, California, September 27, 1956. John Swan remarried in California. The death certificate gives his wife's name as Mrs. Hanna Swan. Hanna and John were not officially married but lived together in a common law marriage. The only surviving relatives mentioned in the obituary are Hanna, her son and her sister. For some reason, it mentions nothing of his earlier life and family.⁴⁰

Hanna (1885-1973) was a Finnish immigrant from Alatornio. Her maiden name was Kanniainen. In her first marriage (1905) she had three children. Her first husband Emile was washed overboard from a whaling boat. The children, two boys and a girl, were sent to a children's home. The girl died there at age four from scarlet fever. Hanna's second husband was Kaarlo Kaste. They had a son, Victor. They went to live in the Russian commune during the "Karelian fever" 1928. However, Hanna and Victor soon returned to America, leaving Kaarlo in Russia. He followed later and the family re-united for some time but Hanna and Kaarlo eventually separated about 1932.⁴¹

Hanna's granddaughter Vikki Anne Ford has childhood memories of John Swan: "John Swan was a soft-spoken man with steel-blue eyes. I remember him always dressed in a clean long-sleeved shirt with tan pants held up with suspenders. He loved to play the organ. I very much enjoyed his music. It was peaceful and meditative. I do not know if his music was composed by him or others. John seemed to be in a different world when he played."⁴²

There are two late interviews with John Swan in local Californian newspapers.⁴³ They both seem to contain a surprising mixture of fact and fiction, and it is sometimes difficult to ascertain which is which. In the article "A Master Craftsman Whose Hobby Is Building Organs" (unknown source, probably ca. 1951), John Swan tells this about his Finnish background:

⁴⁰ The death certificate gives date of birth: "unknown," age: "approx. 81[!]," occupation: "self employed carpenter," address: "710 English Street, Petaluma." The obituary in the Santa Rosa Press Democrat, September 28, 1956 reads: "Funeral services for John Swan, 82[!], who died this morning at his house, 710 English St., will be held Saturday at 2 p. m. in Parent Funeral Chapel, with inurnment in Cypress Hill Cemetery. Services will be private. Mr. Swan had been under a doctor's care for several months. He was born in Finland, where, as an organ builder, he became a friend of the Finnish composer, Jean Sibelius. When he constructed his home in Petaluma he built in an organ. After coming to the U. S. in 1899, Mr. Swan was employed as a carpenter in San Francisco, Eureka, Healdsburg, and Fort Bragg. He moved to Petaluma three years ago, and recently finished building a house in El Verano. He was a member of the Eureka Moose lodge. Surviving relatives are his wife, Mrs. Hanna Swan; his stepson, Victor Kaste, Walnut Creek; and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Hilma Hartz, Petaluma.

⁴³ I am grateful to Vikki Anne Ford for copying these newspaper articles from the collections of her grandmother Hanna Kaste Swan.

“Swan was born in Helsinki, Finland. He learned to be a cabinet maker by working with his father. After attending public schools he entered a trade school to study drafting and win his certificate as a cabinet maker.

Although the religious faith of his parents prevented his learning music at home, his natural gift for music was not to be stifled. He learned to play a cornet at the home of a friend.

“At the age of 17, while Swan was attending the trade school Russia attempted to absorb Finland as it had Poland, Swan and his student friends held secret meetings in a school room as they plotted against the Russians. One night Russian sympathizers raided their establishment and Swan with 20 other boys escaped to Sweden in a fishing boat. Money was provided there for their passage to America and Swan began his long years in America as a cabinet maker in New York City where he had a brother already established.”

The other article “Eighty Year Old Swan In El Varano Builds Complete House Without Help” (unknown source, August 16, 1956 – only a few weeks before John Swan passed away) adds to the mystification by giving John Swan’s 80th birthday as June 10, 1956. (In fact it wasn’t until October 7, 1957.) In this article, he tells this story:

“[H]e is a native of Finland, around Vasa. The reason he came to America was that the Russians, under the tsar, had taken over Finland body and soul. Mr. Swan and four other students at Helsinki University escaped together. He was studying to be an architectural engineer. Had one year to go.

“Before he left Finland he had become friends with Sibelius. ‘Many times Sibelius told me that he didn’t see how he could remain in Finland,’ said Mr. Swan. ‘He had very little money. Then the government, after Finland was free of Russia again, paid him so much to live on and he could stay.’ ‘Germany wanted him very much. So did France, and he almost had to go,’ said Swan. ‘It is right for a government to pay men like him so they can live.’”

The number of discrepancies in these interviews doesn’t seem to have bothered John Swan. Actually, he was born in Evijärvi. For some reason, now he tells us that he was born in Kokkola (according to the 1949 Who’s Who Among Finnish Americans), Helsinki, or around Vaasa. He also tells us that he studied at a Finnish trade school – or university. Furthermore, he tells us that he escaped together with twenty boys – or four... This kind of ambivalent story-telling leaves us in uncertainty when it comes to other alleged pieces of information. The story of his friendship with Sibelius found its way into his obituary. Though they belonged to separate social environments, it would of course have been possible for Swan and Sibelius to have met in the 1890s. However, Swan is not mentioned anywhere in the biographies on Sibelius. The editor of Sibelius's diaries, Professor Fabian Dahlström, has kindly carried out a thorough search for John Swan in pertinent documents but reported no findings.⁴⁴

The first one of these two articles made no secret of John Swan's first family:

"The young Finlander took employment in a piano factory where much hand work was required to build the carved instruments of those days. When work was slack he went to Worcester, Mass., sent to Finland for his 'Best girl' who came to America and married the wood craftsman. They raised a family of ten [!] children, seven of whom are still living. They all hold successful positions in the musical world in the east.

"While living in Worcester, he made violins for his own children and others. One violin that he built was sold to a musician who used it when playing in the Boston Symphony orchestra. He has also made a silver flute, clarinet which he considers to be his solo instrument, saxophone and a bassoon. Also, while in Worcester, Swan organized bands, orchestras, and choirs, his bands averaging from 40 to 60 pieces. He also organized and directed another band while he lived in Cleveland for two years.

"When asked if he would be interested in playing in a local band during the summer months he replied that he would be willing to play 'as they did in the old days.'"

⁴⁴ Fabian Dahlström: personal communication with the author, November 2005.

In this interview, John Swan also claimed to be the inventor of the single reed bassoon. This claim could probably be correct. Information on this extremely uncommon instrument is scarce. It would seem, however, that John Swan was not the only one to make a similar invention.⁴⁵

According to the second interview, “He came to California from Massachusetts after his first wife died. Just for a vacation to forget.” The truth was that he had been gone for three years when Edla died. He did not attend her funeral. Probably nobody from his family ever saw him again. His granddaughter Cynthia Meigs writes: “I never did meet him. My brother was upset that he was in the area and we never knew it until it was too late.” Martha Cutler, also one of John Swan’s granddaughters, writes: “He was alive when we made a family trip out west but my mother had not decided she wanted to reconcile with him. I have a photo of him sitting at an organ taken in California.”⁴⁶

⁴⁵ The single reed bassoon is mentioned in a taxonomy of musical instruments on the internet:

<http://www.music.vt.edu/musicdictionary/appendix/instruments/instrumentmain.html>

However, I haven’t succeeded to find any mention of it in musical literature. It is not mentioned in Lyndesay G. Langwill, The Bassoon And Contrabassoon, London: Ernst Benn Limited/New York: W.W. Norton, 1965; nor in Will Jansen, The Bassoon, in five volumes; Buren, The Netherlands: Uitgeverij Frits Knuf, 1978; nor in the article on the bassoon in The New Grove Dictionary Of Music And Musicians, ed. Stanley Sadie; London: Macmillan, 2001; v. 2, pages 873-895. The article on the bass clarinet in the New Grove, however, describes a nineteenth century bass clarinet manufactured by Heinrich Grenser of Dresden, Germany, constructed in a doubled-up form, similar to that of a bassoon. A photograph of this instrument accompanies the entry (p. 863). According to this article, similar bassoon-shaped instruments were apparently constructed by George Catlin of Hartford, Connecticut, USA (c. 1810) and by Catterini of Padua, Italy (an instrument which the latter called the "Glicibarifono"). While these instruments would certainly have employed a single reed, no mention is made of these instrument’s bore; photographic evidence seems to indicate that the bore of the Grenser instrument is primarily cylindrical, like that of a clarinet, rather than the conical bore of the bassoon. – A single reed mouthpiece for the bassoon was invented by Santy Runyon (1907-2003). I am very grateful to Paul Coats, Clinician and Consultant to Runyon Products, for writing an informative letter on Santy Runyon’s invention: “Mr. Santy Runyon [...] designed a single reed mouthpiece that he used toward the end of his time playing in the Chicago Theatre Orchestra. [...] The period when Santy played there was from about 1928 to 1939. [...] He became famous among professional musicians as ‘the world’s greatest doubler,’ playing the saxophone, flute, clarinet, and yes, even bassoon solos on the radio. [...] Santy told me he invented the single reed bassoon mouthpiece because he did not have time to work on double reeds, he was busy with lessons and 8 shows a day, arranging, etc. [...] Sam Jordon, at that time bassoonist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra [...] asked Santy to make him one also. [...] Santy’s story of making a mouthpiece for Sam Jordon would have to have occurred between 1935, when Jordan began playing with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and 1938 or 1939, when Santy left the Chicago Theatre Orchestra.” – Paul Coats has kindly examined the photo of John Swan with his bassoon and gives his opinion: “It is certainly possible, and very likely, that both Mr. Swan and Mr. Runyon developed their single reed mouthpieces independently, and without knowledge of each other’s work.” Paul Coats: personal communication with the author, December 2005.

SAM LANIN'S ROSELAND BALLROOM ORCHESTRA, 1924

Einar Swan's first New York gig was with Sam Lanin (1891-1977) and his orchestra playing at the Roseland Ballroom on Broadway.

Lanin was from Philadelphia and had studied the clarinet, though he never played it with his band. The orchestra's engagement at the Roseland started shortly after the world war and continued for thirteen years. The Lanin groups recorded under his own name and several pseudonyms. Sponsored by Ipana Toothpaste, his Ipana Troubadours won much acclaim. A lot of jazzmen were featured in Lanin's orchestras during the years: Red Nichols, the Dorsey brothers, Joe Venuti, Eddie Lang, Jack Teagarden, Benny Goodman, and vocalist Bing Crosby to mention just a few.

Suddenly the 21-year old Worcester boy Einar Swan was at the centre of popular music, making new important musical acquaintances. One of them was tubaist Joe Tarto (1902-1986), soon to co-compose "White Ghost Shivers" with Swan.

Einar Swan also arranged for Lanin's orchestra.⁴⁷

Brian Rust's discography lists a number of recordings by Sam Lanin's Roseland Ballroom orchestra where Einar Swan may have participated.⁴⁸

⁴⁸ Brian Rust, The American Dance Band Discography 1917-1942. 2, New Rochelle, NY: Arlington House, 1975, pp. 1030-5. Rust does not mention Einar Swan at all as a member of Lanin's orchestra. It is difficult to ascertain his participation on recordings. Swan's stay with Lanin lasted for five months, according to a Worcester Telegram article of April 24, 1927. Until further evidence allows us to specify the time period, we must settle for the probable approximate duration late 1924–early 1925.

VINCENT LOPEZ 1925-1930(?)

After five months with Sam Lanin, Einar Swan was engaged by orchestra leader Vincent Lopez (1894-1975). The event probably took place in early 1925 and was described two years later by the Worcester Telegram.

“He stayed only five months. He was too good for Roseland Gardens, too good for anything but the best. Vincent Lopez, the famous jazz leader and composer came along one night, picked out Swan’s playing from the rest, asked to talk to him, and when he left it was with a contract with the Worcester man in his pocket.” According to one source, this event happened at a dance date in Springfield.⁴⁹

Lopez was born in Brooklyn, New York, of Portuguese descent. His father, though himself a music teacher, urged young Vincent to begin clerical education at the age of twelve. He left three years later to become a café pianist, started his first orchestra in the mid 1910s, worked his way from vaudeville up to the top hotels and theatres, and made his first recording in 1920. In the '20s his band was named after its New York venue Vincent Lopez and His Hotel Pennsylvania Orchestra.

This sweet-styled band featured the leader’s pianistic pyrotechnics (e.g. in “Nola”). Lopez was a pioneering radio artist, making the first dance band broadcast in 1921. During the '20s he competed with the extremely popular ‘King of Jazz’ Paul Whiteman. The struggle was an uneven one, but, despite this, the career of the Lopez orchestra was prosperous. Many of the recordings begin with the whispering voice of the leader: “Hello everybody – Lopez speaking.”

Soon after Einar Swan started with the Lopez orchestra a major event was to take place: a tour to England. This tour has been thoroughly researched and reported in an article by Joe Moore.⁵⁰

Vincent Lopez and His Orchestra were booked to play at the opening of the Kit-Cat Club and at the Capitol Cinema Theatre in London in May 1925. Booking agent William Morris had offered Lopez £1200 a week for a two-month engagement. The orchestra sailed from New York with the “Leviathan” on May 1 and arrived at Southampton on May 8. The members of the band are in the passenger list (BT 26/827).

This is the run-down given by Joe Moore:

⁴⁹ “High Up Among World’s Jazz Artists,” Worcester Telegram, April 24, 1927. Joseph Fagan, Swan’s former bandmate, remembered in Worcester Sunday Telegram, December 22, 1957, that Vincent Lopez discovered Swan at a dance date in Springfield: “Lopez also was filling an engagement in Springfield that night and heard Swanie play briefly, with the result he signed him up.”

⁵⁰ Joe Moore’s article is on the website <http://www.mgthomas.co.uk/dancebands/American%20Visitors/Pages/Vincent%20Lopez.htm>

Vincent Lopez (29) (piano/leader); Robert Effros (23) (trumpet), Norman Weiner (24) (trumpet), Michael Mosiello (28) (trumpet), Eino Swan (22) (reeds); Bernard Daley (24) (reeds), Biagio Napoli (28) (reeds); Xavier Cugat (25) (violin); Joseph Goldstein (31) (piano); William Kessler (31) (drums); Vincent Tortoriello (23); William Chestock (29), Francisco Giella (30), Frederick Greene (30), Joseph Griffith (31), Morris Kellner (25), Harry Lowenberg (28) (unspecified instruments). Vincent Tortoriello is tubaist Joe Tarto.

As shown by the photographs, Einar Swan played mainly reeds with the orchestra. According to Sylvester Ahola, Swan played first alto sax.⁵¹ The Worcester Telegram proudly lists them: “He is one of the most talented men in the Lopez orchestra, playing the saxophone, the clarinet, the oboe and the flute as a soloist with perfect familiarity, and playing also 18 other instruments ‘but not very well,’ he adds modestly.”⁵²

In his article, Moore vividly describes the band’s engagements in London. A special performance before Queen Mary was arranged at Oxford. Among the sources of knowledge concerning this tour are a Pathé film clip⁵³ and numerous reports in Variety, according to Moore. On July 8, the Vincent Lopez orchestra sailed on the “S/S Paris” back to New York.

The Worcester Telegram asserts that “when the Lopez orchestra had the capital of the British Empire at its feet, the management of the famous Savoy hotel came to the Worcester lad, barely turned 22, and offered him a contract in staggering figures to conduct its orchestra, one of the greatest in all Europe. He turned down the offer. ‘My baby was back in the United States and not very well,’ he says, ‘and I wanted to get back to her. Besides, I’m an American.’”⁵⁴

However, photographic evidence shows that his wife was in fact travelling with him. Einar’s youngest child, Donald, reports “My mother said that after a wonderful London tour in 1925 she returned and gave birth to my sister.” Unfortunately, it would be difficult if not impossible today to verify the story about the offer to conduct the Savoy hotel orchestra.

When Lopez returned from England in July 1925, some musicians were replaced. The orchestra was renamed: Vincent Lopez & His Hotel Pennsylvania Orchestra. Einar Swan is not listed as a member on this orchestra’s recordings according to discographer Brian Rust, but the run-downs of recording orchestras are more often than not subject to some doubt. Rust lists a number of recordings from this period. There is reason to believe that Einar Swan has been overlooked on some Lopez titles in Rust's discography. According to Rust, Swan's instrument in the orchestra was trumpet, while all other available information indicates that he was a member of the reed section. Photographs of the orchestra show that one reed player did indeed double on trumpet. It is not Swan; rather George Napoleon.⁵⁵

Joe Tarto is listed on tuba, bass, and arrangements. Another new member is Charlie Butterfield on trombone. The orchestra changed names to Vincent Lopez & His Casa Lopez Orchestra, since Lopez started his own club and restaurant in 1926. The place was destroyed in a fire early 1927. Even though he had suffered severe financial damage, Vincent Lopez started a new Casa Lopez later the same year.

During 1926, Einar Swan is listed in Brian Rust's discography as a trumpet man on the orchestra's recordings. Two other new band members are Arthur Schutt (piano) and Jimmy Dorsey (alto saxophone), both doubling as arrangers, which also Butterfield did (listed on an August 1927 recording). Tarto and Swan also co-operated as arrangers and composers at this time.

The 1927 article in the Worcester Telegram speaks of the modern way of syncopating the classics: "He is one of the few men in the world who have developed that newest of musical arts – the trick of arranging classics for jazz uses, and he does all [!] the arranging for the Lopez orchestra." Both of these assertions are exaggerated. Firstly, as we have seen, several band members arranged for Lopez. However, Einar Swan seems to have been well paid for his contributions, according to a sketch by violinist Xavier Cugat.

Secondly, already on Paul Whiteman's very first Victor record in 1920 there was a medley containing "Dance Of The Hours" by Ponchielli. In 1921, Ferde Grofé arranged "Song Of India" by Nicolay Rimsky-Korsakov for Paul Whiteman's orchestra. Syncopating the classics was a popular thing and not really a novelty anymore in 1927. (More than a decade later, it became the solution of the repertory problem that was the result of a copyright conflict.)⁵⁶

It is equally hard to determine the reliability of the same article's account that Einar after returning to New York "got an offer from Paul Whiteman, who with Lopez rules the empire of jazz as a twin king. He turned that down also."⁵⁷

Anyway, this successful and multi-talented musician soon did the most unexpected thing. He quit playing.⁵⁸

⁵⁸ Swan probably left Lopez in 1930. According to a 1934 concert program, he had been Dave Rubinoff's arranger for four years at that time after working as Lopez's "chief arranger" for five years. Souvenir Program: The Cincinnati Musicians Association Presents Eugene Goosens, Rubinoff And His Violin, And 100 Cincinnati Musicians In Grand Concert, Music Hall, Cincinnati, O., December 8, 1934.

EINAR SWAN THE ARRANGER

After he left Vincent Lopez, Einar Swan worked mainly as an arranger for several orchestras, among others those of pianist-conductor Gustave Haenschen (1889-1980), Russian-American violinist Dave Rubinoff (1897-1986), the Paramount Theatre, New York, Raymond Paige and the Westinghouse Symphony Orchestra.⁶⁰

It is difficult to understand how such an accomplished and successful multi-instrumentalist could give up playing. In a 1939 letter to his brother Walter, Einar wrote: “Am very glad to hear that you’re doing so well on the oboe. It used to be my favorite instrument. I haven’t played anything except piano and organ for eight years.”⁶¹

Donald Swan explains his father’s choice to quit playing for a living and become an arranger: “[His daughter] Pearl (Leslie von Roeder) was born in 1926 so he became a family man and probably found it better to live in one place and work as an arranger. He had and played every instrument in an orchestra around the house. Can you imagine writing the arrangements for Raymond Paige who had a 100 man orchestra (plus one singer, Hildegard)? Einar arranged for many orchestras when they performed on radio in the 1930s.”

A 1934 concert program provides some additional pieces of information. Einar studied harmony and orchestration in New York under Michael Feveisky, a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov. According to this concert program, after being chief arranger for Vincent Lopez for five years, Einar had been “associated the last four years exclusively with Rubinoff.”⁶²

Compared to records and sheet music, radio is a sadly transient medium. It will be impossible today to ascertain exactly what music Einar Swan did arrange. Donald Swan remembers him “playing different kinds of music on many instruments and then writing the notes down on paper. To me, that was his only job and I enjoyed all of the results. But he always had time to teach me to swim, play games, and enjoy my childhood. We had many visitors all the time, especially Dave and Phil Rubinoff, for many years in any season. Raymond & Mary Paige frequently visited us when my father was arranging for his 100 piece orchestra. Raymond eventually became the music director at Radio City Music Hall working with Al Stillman on the stage shows. I don't remember Lanin or the Dorseys.”

Einar Swan’s arrangements for this concert were: “Love In Bloom”, “The Last Roundup”, “Carioca”, and “Limehouse Blues”.

Finnish-American trumpet player Sylvester Ahola remembered that Einar Swan the arranger was well paid: “He ended up doing arrangements for violinist Dave Rubinoff, and the agency gave him a $1500 bonus for a fancy arrangement that he did of ‘Stormy Weather.’”⁶³

In a 1939 letter, Einar wrote: “Am not working at the moment as the Raymond Paige program folded up. Hope something like it (a large orch.) comes soon as there is no money or prestige in dance arrangements.”⁶⁴

The Swan home was filled with instruments. “When we lived in Malverne, Long Island, NY in the late 1930s, my father had two organs. One a massive Hammond with pipes that filled one end of a large living room opposite a baby grand piano.”⁶⁵

Lyricist Al Stillman (1906-79) was married to Ann Kaufman Swan’s sister Pauline. Besides writing songs, Al Stillman wrote the stageshows at Radio City Music Hall for forty years, and frequently played tennis on their roof with the Gershwin brothers, Bill Tilden, and many celebrities. He is a member of the Songwriter's Hall of Fame, received a Congressional Award for “I Believe” and an Academy Award Oscar for “Never On Sunday.” Donald Swan recalls: “When he and Einar got together with the family they just had fun entertaining & playing.”

On September 9, 1933, the multi-talented Einar Swan penned his “Impressions of Hollywood Orchestra After First Rehearsal For Chase And Sanborn Hour”, probably to entertain the Rubinoffs.

FAMILY LIFE

Einar's wife Ann (Anna) Kaufmann (1904-93) was from Southbridge, MA. They were probably married in Connecticut in 1923.⁶⁶ Ann was born in Kiev, Russia. She went to the Boston Conservatory of Music but never pursued a musical career. Maybe that is where she met Einar Swan. He converted to his wife's Jewish religion – probably in immediate connection with the marriage – and changed his middle name William to Aaron. His son Donald says that after this “his family wanted nothing to do with him”; “John didn't communicate with Einar after he converted”.

When asked about his parents' exercise of religion, Donald Swan replies: “Not really practiced.”⁶⁷

In later records, such as ASCAP records on compositions, his name is invariably given as Einar Aaron Swan. The sheet music of his 1931 hit “When Your Lover Has Gone” gives his name as E. A. Swan.

⁶⁷ Donald Swan: personal communication with the author, September 2005.

According to the 1930 U.S. Census, Einar Swan, age 27, was living at 135 W. 84th St., Manhattan. His birthplace is listed as Massachusetts. His parents' birthplaces are both listed as Finland. Einar's occupation: musician. Industry: arranger.

Einar is listed with wife Anna, age 26, born in Russia, and daughter Pearl, age 3 and six twelfths, born in Massachusetts. Einar and Anna had been married for seven years by 1930.⁶⁸

Einar Swan died August 8, 1940 when vacationing in Greenwood Lake, NY. He was only 37 years old. The cause of death was cerebral hemorrhage.

In a 1939 letter to his brother Walter, Einar writes: "Four years ago a doctor told me that I had very high blood pressure. I didn't do anything about it and about two years ago I had a hemorrhage and stayed in a hospital for four weeks. In the doctors' opinion there is nothing organically wrong but they think I have inherited the condition from mother."⁶⁹

Donald Swan speaks of hypertension: "It runs in the family but now it can be treated, unlike in the 1930s when it caused his early death at 36 years young. Einar was diagnosed with high blood pressure in the 1930s but no one was told that he had only a few years to live. Nurses at Presbyterian Hospital in NYC became friendly with Einar & Ann, visiting them frequently on the pretense of social calls when in fact they were monitoring him."

When a person has hypertension (high blood pressure), it can be either benign or malignant. In the latter case, it cannot be controlled and the person often dies young. Death is usually through a stroke or cardiac vascular hemorrhage.

Donald Swan writes: "My mother did not take me to his funeral. Both of them are buried side by side in Queens, NY, the end of their tour." He also confirms that Frank Sinatra gave his royalties from "When Your Lover Has Gone" to Ann Kaufman Swan.

Einar's daughter Pearl (b. 1926) is now Mrs. Leslie von Roeder, married to Robert von Roeder and living in Pennsylvania. Donald Swan (b. 1930) lives in California and is married to Liny. He writes this about his own family: "I have six children, son Donald Jr., daughters Danielle, Leslie, Gigi & Beatrice, and my son Manny who is a gifted and talented player and writer of rock songs."⁷⁰

SWAN'S SERENADES

The point of departure for this investigation was indeed the ambition to shed light on the unknown man behind the well-known composition "When Your Lover Has Gone."

Being a composer was never the main thing for Einar Swan, however. Royalties for musical compositions were not a reliable income source. Einar Swan's work as a musician and later as an arranger was necessary in order to support himself and his family. Thus he never became a prolific composer. As a consequence, neither has this biographical sketch focused on his compositions.

I have detected only a dozen titles by his hand (including the march he wrote in 1914). Half of them are still merely titles to me.

These are the Einar Swan compositions given by ASCAP on-line: "In The Middle Of A Dream", "A Room With A View", "The Tip Off Cues", "Trail Of Dreams", "What Good Is Scheming", and "When Your Lover Has Gone".⁷¹

The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary also mentions "Swan's Serenade" and "The Spirit Of St. Louis".⁷²

The 1927 article in Worcester Telegram further mentions "White Ghost Shivers", "Closet Strut", and "Orient".⁷³

"When Your Lover Has Gone" (1931) has music and lyrics by E. A. Swan. © Warner Bros. Inc. It was featured with considerable dramatic effect in the 1931 motion picture film Blonde Crazy with James Cagney and Joan Blondell. It has been recorded by hundreds of artists and to this day remains the single "well-known" song by Einar Swan.

"A Room With A View" (1938) has lyric by Al Stillman and music by Einar Swan. © Bregman, Vocco & Conn Inc. It has been recorded by Artie Shaw, H. Forest, G. Auld, B. Eckstine, H. Gellor, B. Hackett, and others.

"In The Middle Of A Dream" (1939) has lyrics by Al Stillman and music by Einar Swan and Tommy Dorsey. © Larry Spier Inc.

"What Good Is Scheming" was written by Einar Swan, Lee Christopher Hamblin and Simon Alban Law, according to ASCAP. (The two collaborators are unknown names to me. The song is also a mystery. Its title is almost identical with the first line of the "When Your Lover Has Gone" lyrics.)

"The Tip Off Cues", "Swan's Serenade" (possibly a theme song for Swanie's Serenaders?), "The Spirit of St. Louis", "Closet Strut", and "Orient" are also mysteries.

Of these songs, “When Your Lover Has Gone” is undoubtedly Einar Swan’s lucky streak. His lyrics are amazingly well-written. He was a truly multi-talented person.

His son Donald Swan writes: “Einar was very talented and able to succeed in many areas. [...] He had little time to write except for a few songs. [...] My father was talented and very busy. Had he more time we may have had more standards from him. When he and Al Stillman got together they both played, sang and created. There was one unpublished fast country song I remember quite well that was on a 78 RPM vinyl record that Leslie had to have gotten. I used to play it over and over again and I can remember the tune and some words. [...] I can't get the tune out of my head, and I can hear and picture Al & Einar singing and stomping their feet. [...] It went like this:

NEW SWING BAND AT THE OLD TOWN HALL

*There's a new swing band stoppin' at the old town hall, gosh oh mighty but it's hot because they've got a new swing band at the old town hall.
Farmer Hiram Moss traded in his cow and horse for a correspondence course to swingeroo
and now! he's tootin at the town hall too.
They're gettin set now they're gettin set
Zeke blew in with his big bass horn
Old Squire Brown on the clarinet
Just brought in another load of corn
Even Deacon Jones brought a dozen saxaphones
Costin' him a pile of coin
So he could join
The new swing band at the old town hall.*

And it went on and on with every instrument in the band being played by Einar. [...] I remember that Einar and Al ended the song with, “Gosh oh mighty, by heck.” [...] “The New Swing Band” was no standard but real impromptu ad lib hot licks that they were both capable of when they had the time. Unfortunately, Einar had little time.”⁷⁴

In a 1939 letter, Einar wrote: “I’m trying to write songs, that is enough of them to get into A.S.C.A.P., so that maybe soon I can give up arranging which is very strenuous when you have to keep at it constantly.”⁷⁵

Composer Alec Wilder has voiced his displeasure with what he calls “the writer’s almost art song attitude” suggested by the piano part of “When Your Lover Has Gone.” Wilder further says that he finds himself “embarrassed” by the “self-conscious ‘blue-note’ ending.” However, he praises some innovative features in the melody line: retaining the pitch from the previous note on the first beat of measures 4, 8, and 28 is “unusual”.⁷⁶

In a 2002 interview on popular ‘standard’ songs, musician/author Max Morath was asked: “Was there a ‘one hit wonder’ composer who made the list by virtue of the strength of his or her one famous standard?” Responding to this, Morath mentions “When Your Lover Has Gone” by Einar Swan, whom he remembers as being very active in the radio and phonograph business, and he reflects on Swan’s untimely death: “Well, who knows what he might have done?”⁷⁷

Above: Census 1930, Worcester, MA (Swan family)

JOHN MATTHEW SWAN (MATTI ALEKSINPOIKA JOUTSEN) was born on October 7, 1877 in Evijärvi, Finland.

In the Ellis Island immigration records, we find him as Matti Svan, 22 years old, sailing with the S/S St. Louis from Southampton on May 13, 1899.

John Swan was a “millwright” with Graton & Knight Co. (WWI registration card 1918), “carpenter” with Bradley Car Co. (census 1920), “self-employed builder” (census 1930). He probably filled in his daughter Aina's 1914 birth record himself, giving his profession as “architect builder”; someone has changed it to “carpenter”.

He was married probably in 1900 in Massachusetts (?) to EDLA MARIA AALTONEN SWAN (JOUTSEN), b. 1 April 1876 in Finland, immigrant 1900. (Her first name is sometimes incorrectly spelled Edna.) Edla died in Worcester on April 23, 1935.

There is an immigrant record of an Edla Aaltonen, 23 years, arriving in September 1900 from Vaasa (Vasa), Finland.

Mysteriously, John Swan has not been found in the 1900 and 1910 census records. Around 1904-05 the family probably lived in New York, a few years later probably in Ohio. A 1912 newspaper clipping gives their address as 4404 Clinton Avenue, Cleveland.⁷⁸ When moving to Gardner, MA, 1913/1914, the Gardner directory states that they come from Cleveland.

Address 1913-14: 167 Pleasant Street, Gardner, MA.

Address 1914-15: 302 Coleman Street, Gardner, MA.

Address 1915-18: 622 Parker Street, Gardner, MA.

The family moved to Worcester 1917/18.

Address 1918: 11 Elliott Street, Worcester, MA.

Address 1920: 16 Glen Street, Worcester, MA.

Address 1930: 42 Marivista Road, Worcester, MA.

Children:

1. ELLEN Victoria, b. probably 1 December 1901 in MA, in 1930 self-employed musician, Worcester, MA. Pianist, Hancock, Michigan. Married Roy Haines of Watertown, later of Lexington. Died probably 29 January 1975 in Boston.
2. EINAR (EINO) William (later changed his middle name to Aaron when converting to the Jewish faith), b. 20 March 1903 in MA; in 1920 wire mill clerk, Worcester, MA; d. 8 August 1940 in Greenwood Lake, NY. Musician/composer, New York. Married probably 1923 in Connecticut (?) to Ann (Kaufman) Swan, b. in Kiev, Russia on January 17, 1904. Ann later married Dan Buchsbaum (divorced). She passed away in a nursing home in Hilton Head, SC on April 23, 1993. – Ann’s parents were Morris Kaufman, b. ca. 1885 in Russia, who was a tailor in Worcester, later in Harlem, New York, and his wife Marion, b. ca. 1885. 3. WALTER Eero, b. 26 August 1904 in New York; d. 3 September 1964 in Worcester. In 1930 orchestra musician, Worcester, MA. Citations from obituary: “He once resided in Tucson, Ariz., for about seven years. [...] Mr. Swan played with the Worcester Brigade Band, Worcester Symphony Orchestra, and the former Little Symphony Orchestra. In the 1920s he went to England and France with the White Fleet Band, and later toured this country with the “Perc” Butler Band. Mr. Swan had been a member of several area dance groups and played for vaudeville shows at local theaters [...] He played several instruments, including the oboe, saxophone and clarinet. At the 65th anniversary reunion of the Brigade Band in 1962, he starred with a comic sweet potato routine. During World War II he was a member of the U.S. Army Band. [...] Walter also did some composing, and had applied for copyrights on several musical numbers.”

She was active in the Finnish-American community and for many years collaborated as a lyricist with Finnish musicians, providing original lyrics as well as translations of Finnish works.” On November 28, 1994 Aina Swan Cutler was awarded the Order of the White Rose by the government of Finland in recognition of her work on behalf of Finnish music.

Notes by Aina Swan Cutler on Swan family history. By courtesy of Donald Swan.

“John Swan played saxophones, clarinets, bassoon & organ. He made a bassoon (maybe more than one) and an organ when he was in California. He made Einar’s first (3/4 size) violin. He was an expert cabinet maker & carpenter. He gave music lessons in Finnish-American communities and organized and led orchestras & bands which involved making musical arrangements. He married Edla Maria Aaltonen, also from Finland, in Worcester, Mass., in 1900. The Swan Family Orch (Svanin Perhen Orkesteri) was active in many Finnish-American communities until the 1920’s both as a group & as soloists. ASC.”
