Research

My current research focuses aspects of global and European labour law. I am since a number of years active in EU labour law research within the European Labour Law Network and the Restatement of Labour Law in Europe project, both funded by the EU Commission. A recent project concerns the impact of populism in European Labour law. The previous project "Global Collective Agreements" (partly funded by Crafoord Foundation) discussed industrial relations and collective agreements as tools for social responsibility and improved labour rights in global supply chains, in production countries, primarily developing countries in Asia. This work is partly connected to the Raoul Wallenberg Institute programs in the Region. Previous projects have most significantly monitored disability rights in the labour market and the rights of undocumented labour migrants as well as other areas of comparative and European labour law. I am since 1999 a member of the Norma Research Group and participated in the Elder Law research programme at the Faculty of Law, Lund, where my work has addressed public and occupational pension schemes.
